Memorandum for Circulation.

Surveyor General's Office, Simla, 25th July 1884.

THE application of the electric telegraph to finding differences of longitude being only of comparatively recent date, the Great Trigonometrical Survey of India was necessarily based on the best value of longitude available from celestial observations at the time the survey was begun: accordingly the longitude of the Madras Observatory was adopted for the origin of the survey. Various improved provisional values of longitude for this origin have since been published by the Government Astronomer, corresponding to the aggregating celestial observations; of these provisional values only the two following need be given here numerically, viz.:

Values of longitude of the Madras Observatory.
Provisional.

- (A). Adopted by the Great Trigonometrical Survey in all its publications ...  $80^{\circ} 17' 21''$
- (B). Adopted in all the Atlas Sheets of India ...  $80^{\circ} 18' 30''$
- In addition, we are now able to state also the value—
- (C). Determined recently through the electric-telegraph ...  $80^{\circ} 14' 51''$  (nearly).

(2). It will be understood that the publications of the Trigonometrical Survey must continue to be exhibited in terms of the value (A), in order that all the longitudes shall be consistent with one another; at the same time, to express these longitudes in terms of the value (C), it is only necessary to diminish the former by the difference between (A) and (C), i.e., by  $2' 30''$ . Similar remarks apply to (B), and hence the longitudes exhibited in the Atlas Sheets of India should be diminished by the difference between (B) and (C), i.e., by  $3' 39''$ .

(3). But, from what has been said, between the period of the adoption of (A) and (B) and that of the recent determination of (C), it was necessary to accept temporarily several other values of approximate corrections than those stated in article (2), corresponding to the improved values of longitude for the Madras Observatory published from time to time; and these different temporary corrections have accordingly been noted on the publications and Atlas Sheets in question as the latter were printed.

(4). Now, however, that a (nearly) final value of the longitude of Madras Observatory, i.e., (C), is known, it becomes necessary to disregard all the different temporary corrections hitherto published, and instead simply to follow the following precepts:—

To find true longitude from Greenwich.

(a). Diminish all the longitudes shown in the publications of the Trigonometrical Survey, including the volumes of the Account of the Operations of the Great Trigonometrical Survey, Charts of triangulation, &c., &c., by  $2' 30''$ .

(b). Diminish all the longitudes shown on the Atlas Sheets of India by  $3' 39''$ .

5. It is obviously important that the facts of article (4) should be circulated for general information, and especially in maritime interests: the following note embodying the required precepts has accordingly been prepared, and copies are available on application to the Survey of India Offices at Calcutta and Dehra Dun.

G. C. DEPREZ, Col., Survr. Genl. of India.

CORRECTIONS TO BE APPLIED TO THE LONGITUDES ON CHARTS, MAPS, &amp;c., OF THE SURVEY OF INDIA.

NOTE.—The longitude of the Madras Observatory as recently determined by the electric telegraph is  $80^{\circ} 14' 51''$  or  $5^{\circ} 20' 59.4$  east of Greenwich, but in all the publications of the Trigonometrical Survey this longitude is assumed at  $80^{\circ} 17' 21''$ , and in all the Atlas Sheets of India at  $80^{\circ} 18' 30''$ ; consequently all the longitudes in the publications of the Trigonometrical Survey should be diminished by  $2' 30''$  and in the Atlas Sheets by  $3' 39''$ , after which the resulting longitudes will be in correct reckoning from Greenwich and consistent with the value  $80^{\circ} 14' 51''$  of Madras Observatory. The above directions are in supersession of all others, if any, on the documents in question.

G. C. DEPREZ, Col., Survr. Genl. of India.
